

Ingenious Champion Profile

Graham Brown – Network Architect, Snap Limited, New Zealand

Juniper Champion

Leigh Gardiner, systems engineer for Juniper, says “Graham is a highly skilled and well respected individual for his involvement in the social media community. He earned Ingenious Champion status as soon as the program became available. He has been instrumental in helping build SNAP into a key service provider in New Zealand.”

Introducing Graham Brown

Graham is employed at Snap Limited after moving to New Zealand from his native UK. Graham is both an Ingenious Champion and a member of the Ambassador Program.¹ View his personal profile and his introductory interview. He blogs for Juniper and engages with his fellow Juniper Ambassadors on Twitter, where he is known as @mountainrescuer.

Career Path

As Graham was working through the Champion curriculum, he gained many insightful pieces of information that have been beneficial both personally and professionally during customer and professional services engagements.

Engaging with Juniper

Graham has actively helped Snap achieve its JPA compliance authorizations—a phenomenal goal! He leads the internal training and certification initiative for all technical employees. Graham takes great pride as he coaches and witnesses the Snap junior network engineers’ progress through the Juniper Networks Certification and Champion programs.

Proud to be an Ingenious Champion

Graham explained that the technical certifications and the other achievements earned as he worked towards the Ingenious Champion level significantly helped him when applying for positions in New Zealand. In fact, because of his qualifications in this regard, he was offered the first position that he applied for ninety minutes after the interview!

On a Personal Note

Graham is a real thrill seeker, and he has a fascinating and active lifestyle. He is an active member of the Alpine Cliff Rescue Team in Christchurch, New Zealand, and before moving there, he was also a member of the Holme Valley Mountain Rescue Team in West Yorkshire, UK
